Literature Review

John Keats is widely calibrated for his unsurpassed style of writing, which is an coalition of symbols, dominant themes, and figurative language in his chronicles. That is why, Zia's (2017) study claims that "Ode to Nightingale" is an unmatched marvel in the casket of John Keats and considers it is an emblem of novelty and creativity. Whereas, Zia's (2022) stylistic analysis reveals that this poem has potential to discriminates itself from Keats' initial compositions. Howbeit, in his study a scrupulous analysis of numerous levels especially, pragmatic, phonological, semantic, and graphological, provides evidence of Keats ascendancy, delineate that Keats's style of writing is different from his genre, discriminates him from his peers. Similarly, Khan's (2014) research also considers Keats distinguish from his peers because of the concept of negative capability. Conversely, Hussain's (2022) research provides evidence and categorized Keats as an embodiment of romantic age along with his typical perspective of sensuality in his compositions which is a conventional feature of romantic period. Contrary, Al-Jumaili's (2020) examination considers that literary brilliance of John Keats is noticeable because of his distinctive and unsurpassed application of symbolic investigation, significantly in the perspective of obliterating conventional notions. This feature of his work distinguish him from his contemporaries. Robinson's (2022) study vocalizes that John Keats is an incarnate romantic era, he exhibits his inclination towards romantic style and technique. Keats intentionally eludes from typical literary style and eschews themes of class difference, politics, and morality. His writings are based on the exploration of beauty that assumes as the characteristic of his era which was romantic age. Moreover, the inspection of Ziouch (2022) accentuates that the beginning of this marvel, "Ode to Nightingale" discloses the existence of vigorous themes of romanticism, including nature, mortality, and transient. Though, with the progression of the poem, poet converts these themes in his own perspective, rather than just attaching with the conventional romantic ideals. Al-Jumaili's (2018) analysis strives to contrive a relationship between Keats and romantic age. In this regard, two theories have applied, the first one is Conceptual Integration Theory and the second is Conceptual Metaphor Theory. Whereas, Alquraidhy's (2022) study repudiate this perspective and pays attention to he concept of negative capability, which highlights a rigorous contrast with romantic period because this concept had capacity to break typical conventions of romantic era. However, romantic age is a combination of imagination and idealization.

In recent scrutinization, Von Bülow and Simpson (2022) have excavated that the concept of negative capability of John Keats detaches him from glorification and develop Keats' affinity with pungent realities of life which is not an element of romanticism. Furthermore, the findings of Jin (2021) dispenses the evidence that concept of realism is also exist in the compositions of John Keats, denotes that he exposed an overwhelming coalition of romanticism and realism in his master pieces. In addition to, "Ode to Nightingale" is also a chronology because it highlights the realities and facts of human experiences. In this poem, in stead of escapism Keats stresses on the need of confronting reality, as articulated by Marks (2022).

Lau's (2022) study delineates that "Ode to Nightingale" reveals a disparity between realism and romanticism. Through this poem, he depicts a string of squabbles betwixt delusion and reality, gratification and aches, persistence and continuum, autonomy and incarceration, illusion and actuality. Similarly, in a Chinese research this dissimilarity further investigated and claimed that the poem based on two contrastive poles. One pole dark and other is white. Dark pole emblemizes tedious and dullness. On the other hand, white side typifies gratitude and excitement (Salah et al., 2022). Additionally, Keats possessed a contrastive approach with his contemporaries and uplifted novelty over traditional romantic styles of writing. This poetic marvel numerous themes and literary devices bestow newness to his work, such as the use of intricate metaphors that exhibit his unique style of writing.

Saha's (2022) analysis vocalizes that this poem unveils a consolidation of conventional and postmodern elements. Transience and morality depicting conventional themes whereas, immortality and negative capabilities highlight postmodern perspectives. Likewise, a contemporary study has unearthed that "Ode to nightingale is not only a poem which is belonged to romantic era but it is also a post colonial marvel. This poem is an emblem of post colonial period of time because it is constantly annihilating convention notions of romantic age and emphasizing numerous features of post colonial period (Saira & Aqsa, 2023).
